Smithsonian scientist's call for UFO's sounds more credible, less cranky than those of UFO buffs. WASHINGTON — We've had our New Year's resolutions for several years now. But don't feel bad if you still haven't achieved one of yours. It's not that the specific resolution is difficult to achieve. Rather, it is that our society's paradigms about what constitutes the "perfect" year are difficult to achieve. What's your New Year's resolution? Let us know in the comments. Being part of American society from generation to generation, year after year, we're subjected to the values of the year in which we are born. Maybe you're convinced it's time to lay down the values of yesteryear. And how could you do that if you don't know what they are? Yes, this is a classic case of what I call "getting the right earplug in the right ear." And it happens all the time. Most of us get called a crank whenever we suggest that we're thinking in terms of a different year than the one in which we were born. Is it really something to be ashamed of? To find out, we need to ask what society at large says is the perfect year, and when we identify this year, we'll have a benchmark against which we can measure how well we're doing. Some of the older years have traditions that are more likely to be observed, but I'm going to focus on the year we are now. Here's a partial list: Year | Citation
