* For web design: Adding some basic effects and handling advanced functions, such as saving files as layers for web use. * For print design: Adding basic or advanced text, color, line, and composite effects. In this book, we focus on Photoshop's text and graphics features, and we primarily use Photoshop for laying out, designing, and printing on a regular basis. Even for experienced users, it's worth it to take some time to cover the basics. # Photoshop's File Structure In this book, we are going to cover the basics of working with Photoshop's layers, of which there are two types: `_Vector Layers_` and `_Raster Layers_`. Let's start by examining the terminology. A layer represents a particular content on a page; for example, a simple text document is a Vector Layer, and a photograph is a Raster Layer. You can manipulate a Raster Layer, which is a format for displaying and storing an image, and you cannot manipulate a Vector Layer. Your tools, including Photoshop's tools, can only work on raster files. You can see the difference between the two in Figure 2-2. **Figure 2-2** A Vector Layer (left) and a Raster Layer (right). You can also create and modify each of these types of layers separately in Photoshop. They can also be mixed together for specific jobs (such as using a Raster Layer in a file that is part Vector, as shown in Figure 2-3"). You can work with layers in different ways. For example, you can work with them one at a time and group them together to make changes more efficient. You can also move a layer to another file to work on it separately. You can do this by using a selection tool and dragging a layer into another file. Finally, you can work with layers in order to keep them together as a unit. For example, you can use a layer's text effects and other controls to make changes to a group of layers. We will discuss the many options for working with layers and their many attributes in just a moment. For now, let's move on to learn more about layers and how they work in Photoshop. **Figure 2-3** A Raster Layer (left) in a Vector Layer (center). Vector Layers A Vector Layer is a layer where objects, patterns, and text are treated as a whole shape made up of a series of 2D

Navigational and Incompatibilities Q: I'm beginning to use Radiant's navigation for the first time, and while I can find things I want, I can't understand how to compare to what I have on the site. I know that this is a big issue, but I can't find a comprehensive explanation of how it works. For instance, I'd like to determine the difference between my situation and the While I don't have access to it, I'm aware that the shipper has possible listings that we don't. It's possible that what I have can't be found in my list. I'll find my shipper's listing, but I'm wondering what it would take to join it to my site and be able to compare. Another issue is that I'm trying to determine if a listing is available, but its price matches our maximum, so I'm unable to buy it. I'm trying to do something like "is there a listing that's cheaper than our maximum?" -- Kerry A: You're looking for "Incompatibilities." To get there, follow the Menu > Settings > Site Navigation > Incompatibilities menu item. The Incompatibilities window has a number of tabs, the one you're looking for is the Catalog tab. This is where you can select the items that you have in your catalog that aren't in the shipper's. There you should be able to see the differences. From there, select Compare Catalog Items from the dropdown at the top of the Catalog tab. Then select Incompatibilities, and you should be able to see if there is a difference between your items and the items on the shipper's site.
